

When we became writers

When children experience (listen to stories and songs, are read to or read independently) authentic literature, they begin to understand the story structure. They begin to enjoy the jokes, pictures and language in the books. They realize that they too have stories to tell and can be encouraged to produce hand-written illustrated books.

As they go through the experience, they realize that book making is long process of thinking, sharing, feedback and several drafts. This is the story of the librarian at Khamgaon as she helps them become writers and poets.

One day our librarian read us a book. We liked it a lot.

Then she said we too could become writers and make our own books.

We wrote our stories –
first draft

The librarian asked us questions and gave suggestions.

We talked to the librarian and our friends.

We wrote some more.

We changed our lines.
We changed pictures.

We completed
our books
over ten days.

We are proud to be writers.

Some day we will print our books.
